Greg Fordham is Managing Director of Airbiz and has over 25 years experience as a consultant to the aviation industry. He is acknowledged for his expertise in airport strategic planning and air transport development. Greg has developed a team of consultants that have undertaken over 2000 projects and studies in over 50 countries, on 5 continents. Through his involvement in a wide range of commercially based projects, Greg has an in-depth knowledge and understanding of airport economics and strategic planning issues.

In 2009 Greg was recognised by Engineers Australia in their top 100 most influential engineers. Greg is a board member of both Airports Council International (ACI) Asia-Pacific and ACI World Business Partners. He has lectured at Loughborough University, Monash University and the University of New South Wales and is a member of the Advisory Board for the aviation courses at Swinburne University.
